A School For Kaputula (A Zambia Life Book 1)

Synopsis

With only £600 in the kitty, building a community school in Zambia was never going to be easy. Yet if Moira Cooke and husband Robert had had any inkling of all the problems it might entail, they might well have caught the next plane back to the UK. Blood, sweat and tears are shed as temperatures rise and dissension splits the rural community threatening to bring the project to a bitter end. The head teacher is forced to leave, the workforce dwindles, the budget is blown, accounts refuse to balance and finally the money runs out. It's as thrilling as taking a roller-coaster ride leaving you to make up your own mind at the end as to whether the project was a success or not.

Customer Reviews

Insight into the frustration of trying to build a community school in Zambia. Detailed description of frustrations, but no description of what the community looks like, how they live, what they eat or any stories about the orphans for whom the school is built! Discussion of how funds disappear, but not where the missing money goes. Typos increase at end of book. I didn't know there was a glossary until I got to the end. Words could have been defined in the text.
